Louie Castoria, a San Francisco-based professional liability attorney, adds the problem is compounded by questions over classification and insurance.

“There’s no uniformity among the states or municipalities about how we should treat e-bikes. For example, there’s no mandatory liability insurance you have to have coverage for,” Castoria said, adding that he urges e-bike owners to consult with their home and auto insurers to nail down what would be covered in the event of an accident or theft.
